HOOD RIVER

Hood River Valley, famed alike on the Eastern seaboard, in the great Middle West and on the Pacific Slope, as the greatest apple, strawberry and cherry growing section in the world, is situated sixty-six miles east of Portland and twenty-three miles west of The Dalles, and constitutes the commercial and horticultural backbone of the rich and progressive county of Hood River, that was carved this summer from the northwestern portion of Wasco County.

This famous valley lies between two ranges of mountains, and from its head, which rests against the eternal snows of the peerless Mount Hood, to its mouth, which debouches upon the majestic Columbia river, is twenty miles in length and from five to eight miles in width. Within these confines lie over fifty thousand acres of the most prolific and profitable land in Oregon, if not indeed in the United States. Many of these acres are not as yet under cultivation, but each year witnesses the widening and extension of the cultivated zone and each farm thus established upholds and adds to the reputation of the valley as the banner apple and berry district of the coast.

The soil of Hood River Valley, a mixture of volcanic ash, decomposed sandstone and mineral oxides, together with the dry climate in summer and the medium rainfall, makes irrigation for berries and small fruits a necessity, and here again nature has smiled on the valley, for through its center tumbles and dashes the picturesque Hood River with enough and to spare of the purest water from hidden springs in the glacial caverns of Mt. Hood. Ditches and flumes carry this water by gravity to all parts of the valley and lateral flumes supply each farmer at a minimum of expense.

Nowhere else has there been a spot of earth found where the apple, cherry and strawberry approach the matchless size, flavor and color of these fruits as sent out over the country from Hood River.

The climate of this part of the state is all the most critical could wish. Here are no cyclones to carry away our houses, neither do the rigors of winter nor the shifting extremes of summer prevail. The air comes ladened from the mountains with sweet smelling fragrance of the fir and pine. While this is not a damp climate, the precipitation is sufficient for most purposes. The weather bureau report for last year—1907—was 37 inches.

Fine fir timber abounds in the upper valley, sufficient to supply the needs of the inhabitants for many years to come. Gushing springs come from the foothills supplying the people with deliciously clear cool water; this is especially true of the upper valley. Here, too, the soil is of the very best, and some of the best apples come from around the base of Mount Hood. Unimproved lands in the upper valley sell today at prices ranging from $40 to $100 per acre, while improved ranches in the lower valley, that are planted to fruit and partially or wholly in bearing, command good prices, ranging up to $600 to $1000 per acre.

Hood River shipped this season 100 car loads of strawberry berries that averaged to the grower $2.70 per crate. An acre will yield, when properly cultivated, as much as 200 crates of berries. The cost per crate for cultivation and marketing is reckoned at 80 cents.

Apples fare much better. A 7-year-old tree will yield from three to five boxes of merchantable fruit, and at nine years as much as 20 boxes. Sixty-five trees are generally planted to the acre. A 10-acre tract, therefore, will have 650 trees, and at seven years old will yield three boxes to the tree or 1950 boxes, and at eight years five boxes to the tree or 3250 boxes. At nine years of age these same 10-acre tracts, if they have received proper care, should yield from 8000 to 16,000 boxes of fruit, and, if of the leading varieties, will sell readily for from $1.50 to $3.00 per box. The entire crop of Spitzenbergs of last season sold at prices varying from $2.25 to $3.25 per box, while Yellow Newtowns brought as high as $2.50 a box, and Ben Davis $1.40 a box, and at these prices the supply does not and probably never will equal the demand.

HOOD RIVER CITY.

The city of Hood River, now the county seat of Hood River County, is one of the most picturesque of the smaller cities of the state. It occupies a commanding site at the juncture of the Hood and Columbia rivers, and is on the line of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Co., thus being able to ship its products either east or west, by rail or boat. It has a population of about 2500 people.

The city is regularly laid out; has wide, regularly numbered streets that are lined with a species of oak trees peculiar to the Pacific Coast, under whose ample and inviting foliage restful moments may be enjoyed on a summer day. On the south of the city is a rise of 200 feet. Fringed along the gently sloping sides of this hill and facing the city and the Columbia, are groves of small oaks and pines, and hidden away among these are some of Hood River's beautiful homes.

To the north across the Columbia River in the State of Washington, stands Mount Adams, resplendent in its beauty of perpetual snow, its hoary head piercing the sky at an elevation of 12,240 feet above sea level. Just at the foot of the city, its waters flowing westerly, is the broad expanse of the Columbia, its busy mart of steam and sail passing in panoramic view before the beholder. This mighty flow of water is one and one-half miles wide at this point.

Dwellings, with well kept lawns, fill up the residence part of the city. Churches, conveniently located, are a part of the moral force of the community.

Good school buildings are here and an opera house of ample size to accommodate theater-goers, occupies a prominent corner. Nearly all classes of business and trade are represented. Substantial business blocks of brick and wood are a part of the improvements to be seen in progress.

The "Hood River Glacier" and the "Hood River Newsletter" furnish the local news weekly, while "Better Fruit," a monthly magazine of the highest character, discusses the great industry of the section in an intelligent and able manner.

Wasco County Directory

ANTELOPE

Antelope has a population of about 300. It is situated in the southeastern part of Wasco County, seven miles south of the terminus of the Great Southern Railroad at Shaniko. It has been a trading center for the surrounding stock country for the past fifteen years, and was incorporated as a city in 1897. This place is in the middle of a far-famed stock country, shipping annually not less than 100,000 head of sheep and a large number of horses and cattle. There is a splendid public school, employing three teachers. The town owns its own water works system, which is self supporting and affords revenue to the city.
